Dear Albert:

I never know whether my letters will find you at home or half way around the world on one of your interesting research projects. However, I am taking the chance of writing you at home in the hope that you will be able to send me a fresh culture of your attenuated type I poliomyelitis virus, LSc strain. My reason for requesting this culture is that the same strain of virus which we have had in this laboratory for several years has given us some peculiar results recently following feeding of monkeys. In fact, the possibility exists in my mind that it may even have become further attenuated. At any rate if you would be so kind as to send this, we would deeply appreciate your courtesy.

Best personal regards,

Gordon C. Brown, Sc. D.
