Dear Dr. Sabin:

I have done a little book on polio, to be issued by Simon & Schuster shortly after the start of the vaccine trial. It has the blessing of the National Foundation and a copy is there now for review and correction.

The first part is an expanded version, rewritten and fleshed-out with details, of the Life article; the second is made up of questions and answers -- the questions that parents are most likely to ask.

Your name appears at several places in the book, crediting several aspects of your work; but since the information comes from official scientific sources I have no reason to doubt its accuracy. So I am not sending those lines.
The passages enclosed, however, deal with your present work and with the live-versus-killed debate. I am not sure that I have understood your position, and I will be very grateful indeed for your corrections and comments.

I am hoping to have all corrections in hand by this next Friday, so that I can give final copy to the publisher by Monday, March 1.

With thanks and best regards.

Sincerely,

Robert Coughlan
