Armstrong's answer on moon dust:

No, I was not concerned. We had considered this problem for a long time before the flight, and many unmanned tests of the surface had been made. We were fairly confident that it would hold us. Of course, there is always the chance of something unexpected, but we were certain enough that there was no real concern.