Re: Neil Armstrong news conference

In connection with the forthcoming tenth anniversary of the first moon landing, Neil Armstrong, who made the landing, will meet with the press on Monday, June 11 on the campus of the University of Cincinnati where he is Professor of Aerospace Engineering. He will also appear with others at a NASA news conference in Washington on July 20, the actual anniversary of the first landing. He has agreed to the June 11 meeting at the University, realizing that you have different deadline priorities and would find an earlier meeting useful as background.

The University press meeting will be held in room 402 of the Tangeman University Center at 2 p.m. on the 11th. For those unfamiliar with the campus, a map is enclosed. Advise the attendant at the entrance that you are covering the Armstrong news conference, and you will be admitted for parking. Once on the campus, you may find parking space near the Tangeman Center, or you may have to use one of the campus garages (marked on map). Enter the Center through one of the main doors and go up the escalator to the fourth floor. Directions will be posted to room 402.

Professor Armstrong is aware of the special interest in this tenth anniversary, and he has received a large number of requests from the media, in the U.S. and abroad. He will not be able to see everyone individually but will be glad to cooperate with you at this general news conference.

If you have questions or special needs, please call this office at 513-475-3344 as we will be handling arrangements and will try to fill your requirements while you are on the campus.
